Colonel Fowle wired to a friend here the decision of Mrs. Lee, It was gralifying to Lieutenant-Governor Willard, Mayor McCarthy, representing the State and city, that the decision was reached without suggestion from them. These gentlemen arrived this afternoon, the former to represent the State, owing to the illness of Governor Montague; the latter to present the request of the Richmond Council that the body of General Lee be laid to rest in the city he loved and had defended for four years of bloody and had defended for four years of bloody

Mrs. Lee made the entire trip alone. The news of General Lee's death was received after she left Fort Oglethorpe last night and the first information she herself received of it was in a newspaper which she bought on the train near Lynchburg the morning.

The party at the station here to meet Mrs, Lee and Mrs, Mann Page and Mr. B. S. Fowle, Mrs. Lee's brother, the last two having gone to Lynchburg this morning, consisted of Captain Dan M. Lee, Lieutenant-Govornor Williard, Mayor Carlton McCarthy, of Richmond; Colonel Jo Lane Stern, Assistant Inspector General of Virginia Volunteers; Major E. T. D. Myers, of Richmend; Inspector General Grant McCarthy, and the state of the married Lieutenant George Mason Lee. Mrs. Burton, U. S. A., whose daughter married Lieutenant George Mason Lee. Mrs. Ruston, Miss Virginia Mason Dorsey, Mrs. Caskie Cabell, Leigh Robinson, of this city; Major Robert W. Hunter, of Richmond; Major R. E. L. Michle and Mrs. Michle, Major Jefferson Keane and Major Robert F. Mason.

The train bearing Mrs. Lee was due to arrive at 9:20, but arrived at 10:21. The party went inside the gates and several of them passed into the Pullman, which Mrs. Lee occupied. There was an effecting meeting between her and Captain Lee and it was some minutes before she could control herself sufficiently to undertake to pass into the station and to Captain Willard's carriage, which was in waiting. She came out leaning on the drum of, Captain Lee, her figure shaking with emotion. She Insisted that she be driven to the hospital at once. She was accompanied thither by Mrs. Cabell, Mrs. Page and Mrs. Burton. She spent a half hour in the room with the still figure, which seemed to be sleeping on the couch in the center of the Misses Dorsey, cousins of General Lee, at No. 1142 Eighteenth Street, Northwest. Mrs. Page remained with-her.

Senator Daniel reached the city late last night. He did not know of the death of General Lee until this morning. The shock of the news was very great, and he had not recovered from it when he went to the hospital this evening. His head was bowed with sorrow as he passed inno the darkened room in which lay the body of the dead soldier.

The light of the afternoon sun drifted in through the closed blinds. It was easy to believe the quiet figure resting on the couch in the center was that of a sleeping man, who would arise when refreshed. His face looked as natural as if the warm blood coursed through the veins, and the lips seemed almost ready to frame speech. A beautiful wreath of white roses and lilies sent from the White House rested on the bler. The body is attired in a plain black suit.

Senator Daniel stood for several minutes with folded armsh regarding the face of his dead comrade. Then he stooped and pressed his lips to the cold brow and turned and left, the room. There was so much of sorrow in his slience. "Lee was one of the truest men who ever lived, was his brief tribute to the memory of the departed soldier.

One of the affecting incidents of the day at the hospital was the tribute of a little child. This afternoon a little boy, who said he was four years old, came todding up the stops leading from the first floor, and approaching Miss Dorsey, who was at the door of the death chamber, held out a bunch of dandellons.

"In picked these flowers to put on General Lee."

The tears streamed down the cheeks of Miss Dorsey as she strained the little fellow to her bosom, and then she took the flowers into the room and placed them on the old soldier's bosom. Universal Sorrow.

Universal Sorrow.

Wherever one went to-day the death of General Lee was sure to be the topic of conversation. This was especially true of the War Department, where the General was as well known as was any officer who came to headquarters. Indeed, there are few men in the building, from Secretary Taft to the humblest watchman who did not know him, and for all his acquaintances he invariably had a pleasant word. In the hotel lobbles Southern men, men of all sections, discussed his sudden taking off, and the sorrow was universal.

His death came as a shock, for when Washington went to bed last night it was believed the end was not immiment. When General Lee arrived in Washington yesterday morning it was known that his condition was serious, and that the chances were against recovery, chiefly because of his age. The attending physicians, however, were hopeful even to the very end, which came very suddenly, and even unexpectedly to them when they were not actually in the room of death, but within call.

There are many things which lead to the belief that General Lee believed the attack likely to terminate fatally. This is believed to explain his desire to come all the way to Washington, and be among friends and relatives rather than be General Lee expressed his surprise, and more than once manifested his pleasure, that upon his arrival in Washington so many of his friends, who had learned of his condition, should be at the station to meet him. He was particularly glad to see some of his relatives there; also Major Michle and Major Kean, of the army, with whom he had served in Cuba, and both of whom he loved very greatly. As soon as he saw Major Kean, he said: "I am glad to see you, Major, and I place myself entirely in your hands and under your orders."

As soon as General Hays heard of the condition of General Lee, the former hastened to the hospital, but did not see his old friend on account of the desire to keep the patient as comfortable as possible. He remained outside of the door of his life-long friend, keeping watch, General Lee, however, did not forget his old comrade in arms, and throughout the evening asked repeatedly if Hays were around. He seemed very anxious to have a last look at General Hays, and relatives went outside of the room and returned with a message from General Hays were to the effect that he was keeping guard outside the door. General Lee's eyes brightened, and he said: "I'm so glad General Hays is here, too. Everybody is awfully good to me. Everybody seems to know all about my illness and to want to help me."

STREAM OF CALLERS AT THE HOSPITAL

First Expression of Sorrow From Cuba-Miss Cisneros

Cables.

(From Our Regular Correspondent.) WASHINGTON, D. C., April 29.-There nas been a continual procession of callers at the hospital to-day. These included men in every walk of life-army officers, men in every war in interesting officers old veterans of both armies, government officials and citizens in private life. Messages of sympathy and condolence have poured in since early this morning, coming from every part of the country. The first caller to-day was Senor Don Antonio Martin Rivero, first geeretary of ctate of his health permits. One of the callers to see the remains of General Lee to-day was Samuel Morton Gaines, fornerly of General W. F. (Robney) Lee's command.

It is a remarkable fact that every Northern or Western man who discussed the subject of a resting place for General Lee expressed the opinion that he should be buried in Arlington. It indicated the general feeling that Fitzhugh Lee was a national character and should not be regarded as belonging to one section, but to all sections.

CUBANS GRIEVE OVER DEATH OF LEE

Story of How He Saved Life of One of Officers of General Gomez.

(Special Cable to The Times-Dispatch.)
HAVANA, April 20.—The news of the death of Major-General Flizhugh Lee has been received in Cuba with great sorrow. He was a true friend of the Cubans and to him our country owes in a great measure her liberty.

On the 22d of August, 1896, the writer, then a captain of the cavalry of General Gomez, and commanding one of his squadrons, was captured by the Spanish column of Colonel Balanca, after a bloody struggle near the Lown of Yagnajay, in Santa Clara. I was taken to Caribarien, and from this latter place sent to Havana under a strong escort of civil guards.

in the afternoon. I knew that my fate was sealed.

The Spaniards at that time were making war without quarter, and the only prisoners who stood a chance to escape were those who enjoyed the benefits of American citizenship. I was not a citizen of the United States, and consequently had no hopes of being spared.

I was taken to Cabana's fortess, and at 4 o'clock appeared before my judges. By unanimous vote I was condemned to death.

The hastened back to the hospital, and on realizing that the end was so near. They hastened back to the hospital, and one of them arrived just three minutes after he died. General Lee was conscious until five minutes before his death, and was cheerful to the very last. He seemed to be just as bright, although his articulation was thick, as when at the head of his troops he used to sing: "If you want to have a good time, jine the cavalry." Shortly before his death he looked around his room and asked of his cousin, Mrs. B. H. Fowle, who stood near with an attendant, "who is here?" Mrs. Fowle answered, "I am here and here's a pretty nurse."

"Ah," he gallantly answered, with a smile, they are all so pretty and sweet here."

I smile, they are all so pretty and sweet here."

A few minutes later his brother Captain Daniel Mason Lee, who had hurried to the city from Fredericksburg, arrived at the bedside. General Lee recognized his brother and whispered something to him to the effect that he could not talk because his doctors had advised against it. Mr. Lee stood for a moment looking at his stricken brother and then stepping aside into the corridor to where friends were waiting, he said, "Why, Fitz is dying."

That was the first announcement of the approach of the end, which came in a yery few minutes, His last audible speech was the little gallantry about the

After the death of General Lee, a large American flag was hung from a circular window in the tower of the hospital as a mark of respect. The flag had to be hung from the window because there is no flag-staff on the building. The remains were removed to the large reception hall on the second floor, directly under the tower and remained there until late this afternoon in charge of a cousin, Miss Virginia Mason Dorsey and another relative.

Early this morning a beautiful box of illies and roses was received at the hespital from the White House, it contained Mrs. Roosevelt's card with the words in her own handwriting, "With sincerest sympathy."

Many other flowers were received at the hospital, including a beautiful offering from Dr. Henry St. George Tucker, of the George Washington University, tormerly of Washington and Lee University, at Lexington, where Robert E. Lee is burled and over which a son of General Robert E. Lee, General George Washington Cirits Lee, formerly presided. Dr. Tucker has offered to place his entire house at No. 1812 II Street, Northwest, at the disposal of the Lee family.

Shortly afterwards there camé for Mrs. Lee a cablegram from Mrs. Carbonnel, formerly Miss Cisneros, who was rescued from prison by Americans and Cubans just prior to the outbreak of the war with Spaid. She spent considerable time in Richmond as the guest of General and Mrs. Lee, and later married Senor Carbonnel, afterwards an a.de on General Lee's staff. The Cubans are deeply devoted to the memory of General Lee. When a party of Cuban school teachers visited this country à few months ago they came to Philadelphia while General Lee was in the city, and he was asked to be present. He was unable to attend, but Miss Virginia Mason Dorsey, a cousin of his, was there, and when her relationship to the general was learned, the teachers overwhelmed her with attentions.

The Ancient and Honorable Artillery, of Roston, the oldest military organization in the new world, sent a telegram of condolence. "Our loss is irreparable," said Hon. C. Assistant Attorney-General Russell called at the hospital, in company with Colonel John B. Mosby. Mr. Russell expressed the highest appreciation of the claracter of General Lee.

Among the callers was an old palsied vet., scarcely able to drag one foot after the other. He came along the hall, uncovered, proceeding with difficulty. "I want to see the dear old rebel," he said, with a strong Irish brogue, to Miss Dorsey and Mrs. Rozler Dulaney, who sat in the hall near the door of the room in which the body lay. He passed in through the portleres alone. He spent several minutes in the chamber and came out with the tears streaming from his eyes. His name was not known.

The Annual Spring Festival Commences at Academy Tomorrow Night.

Artists Are the Best That Money Could Bring Here.

Despite the heavy drain on the purses of amusement-loving people by the heavy theatrical year culminating with the record week of "Ben Hur," the annual spring festival of music, beginning t -morrow night in the Academy, under the auspices of the Wednesday Club, promises to be a brilliant success.

The club has established its hold on the music-lovers of the State, after years of uphill fighting.

This year the programme secured for Richmonders and their cousins in surrounding cities is as rich in masterpleces as it is varied. The artists who are to star in the concerts are the best that money could bring, and the chorus is bigger and better voiced and better trained than ever.

The chorus will rehearse to-morrow with the orchestra at 2 o'clock. The members are requested to bring their music and to be prompt. At this rehearsal the oratorio, "The Seasons," will be given with full orchestral accompaniment. On Tuesday morning at 9:30 o'clock the children will be rehearsed with the orchestra and after their rehearsal the numbers for the Tuesday night concert will be rehearsed with the chorus of grow-ups. All of these rehearsals will be held in the Academy of Music.

The orchestra will arrive this morning. Everything is ready for the featival, and the sale of seats is such that those who desire good reservations for the three performances are advised to get to the box office early to-morrow morning.

The Worccater Telegram says of Ellison Van Hoose's voice and method.
No little interest attached to the first appearance of Mr. Van Hoose. A good reputation had preceded him, although coupled with it was the fact that he is a compartively young tenor. The only trace of youth in his work last evening lay in the delightful freshness of his voice. It is a highly individual voice, robust, verile, yet smooth, and always musical. An energetic, dramatic temperament goes with it, as it ought to accompany such a voice, but Mr. Van Hoose has evidently learned that temperament, as well as voice, must be siudied and trained. This means that he held himself in arm control and never overdid his part, a noteworthy fact in a singer whose voice is so powerful and whose presence is so magnetic. His interpretation of his role was purely artistic, and was so recognized by the resulting them. magnetic. His interpretation of the rose was purely artistic, and was so recognized by the audience. Edward Johnson.

Mr. Edward P. Johnson has made for himself a name and fame in music festivals, and he is looked upon as one of the special favorites. The sympathetic quality of his voice appeals to all who love music, while the remarkable range, with the phenomenal high notes, musk him as one of the best tenors of the present time. His voice is often compared to the old Italian favorite, Campanini, and a great future awaits him in opera if he ever decides to take such a career. At present he has all he can do inoratorio, concert and church work. He has recently been engaged as the solo tenor in the Brick Church, considered one of the finest church positions in New York city.

Of the many pleasant things said of Mr. Martin, the comment of the Musicial Courier is striking:

"Mr. Martin's success as a singer has been of the most pronounced character, and places him among the leading bassos of the concert stage. He sings with the expression and technique of a true artist, always winning encomlums wherever he appears."

Of Mme. Bouton, the Banger Dally News snys:

"Never, we think, has Mme. Bouton sung with so good effect as in her principal selection on Saturday night—the Grand Aria from "Fidolic," Full and rich and round was that well cultivated middle register; equally full and marvelously clear and sweet were those upper notes—notes so true and pure and so very high for a contralio, golden apples on the tree of musical perfection. Loud was the applause which greeted the close of the selection, and very red were the roses which awarded her efforts to please "There was an encore, of course—a simple little ballad beautifully done.
